

"LET'S GO," SOLDIER SLOGAN

Expert Declares the Phrase, So Popular With the Troops, Did Much to Keep Up Morale.

The most inspiring and, at the same time, the most popular slogan used by our troops during the World War is "Let's Go," in the unpretentious words of Edward L. Munson, chief of the morale branch, general staff of the army. Colonel Munson said:

"My conviction on this subject—a subject that is of real importance to students of military morale—is based on the almost unanimous verdict of those who served with troops, reinforced by the judgment of many who have looked at the question from other angles. The appeal 'Let's Go' combines all the necessary psychological elements of a military slogan.

"The slogan contains no word of command, no stern admonition, it does not impose itself upon the will of the hearer. It calls rather for companionship, for voluntary action and contribution on the part of the soldier, for a concerted movement prompted by mutual desire.

"My analysis may not be a correct one, but, correct or not, I am certain that 'Let's Go' was used spontaneously under all circumstances and always with an encouraging response. Other slogans were adopted from time to time by various contingents of the expeditionary forces and units serving in this country, but none of them quite filled the place of the one now under discussion. 'Where do we go from here?' was not an unusual sentence during the war and eye-witnesses tell us that the song by that name was sung quite cheerfully as the transport Tusculum sank into the waters of the British channel. 'When do we eat?' 'Who won the war?' and 'Where are the ships?' were three sentences many times repeated by American soldiers, but they were usually used in a satirical vein and formed an outlet for the distinct and individual humor of our troops, but for everyday use, in rest, or battle, the slogan 'Let's Go' stands foremost as the strongest stimulus to mind and hence to bodily effort."

Does Influenza Cause Tuberculosis?

Dr. Charles H. Macey of Pittsburgh stated before the Medical Society of Pennsylvania that he had studied 534 cases of tuberculosis, the onset of whose symptoms was referred to an attack of influenza. The number of patients known to have had tuberculosis prior to the onset of influenza was comparatively small. In the majority of these cases the influenza had reactivated old quiescent lesions. In 34.3 per cent of the series studied the onset of tuberculosis dated from the influenza. A large number of cases in the series showed other conditions while, were non-tubercular, though they simulated tuberculosis.

This Man All Ups and Down.

J. B. Evans is one of the men who has a distinctive job in the United States, no other man having a similar job, or at least not exactly similar. He is the man that runs the elevator in the Washington monument, and he has been sliding up and down that white shaft for 42 years, an exchange states. If one estimates in miles the number of feet he has risen and fallen again, one could find that a similar distance would run three times around the world.

In addition to this the number of men and women from every part of the world who have been carried up by him would populate New York city, and their numbers have included every social condition known to man, from ruling powers to paupers, and from African savages to scientists from the world's universities. He never counted the number of times he has been asked: "How high is the monument?" but if he had he thinks it would run into the millions.

Prehistoric Skeletons.

The skeletons of a prehistoric elephant and a prehistoric ox have just been found at a depth of 45 feet below the soil of London, when excavations were made for a building in Regent street. The bones date back to the days when the world was young, and mammoths, giant elephants and hippopotami lived in the great semi-tropical marshes of what is now England.

The finding of such traces of former ages is not a novelty in this geologically old country. A few years ago a lump of ivory weighing 16 pounds was dug up at Chelms, and was found on investigation to be a mammoth's tooth. The skull of an enormous rhinoceros was dug up in Fleet street recently. In 1901 a lead coffin, containing the bones of a human being, believed to have lived 4,000 years ago, was unearthed in north London.—London Mail.

Cured of Stomach Trouble and Constipation.

Rachel Cribley of Beaver Dam, Ohio was sick for two years with stomach trouble and constipation, taking one medicine after another with only temporary relief. "My neighbor spoke so enthusiastically of Chamberlain's Tablets" she says "that I procured a bottle of them at our drug store to try. A few days treatment convinced me that they were just what I needed. I continued their use several weeks and they cured me."—11-14

We would be pleased to show you samples of Chamberlain's Tablets. Brown-Ward Co., phone 27—6046

See the Goods Before You Buy

The one sure way of knowing just what you will get for your money is to go right into a local store and pick it out. When you buy from pictures and descriptions you cannot see the actual value until it is too late to decide you do not want it.

Our local dealers would not think of demanding the full price before showing goods. Yet that is what is required when you buy by mail.

Why don't you deal in known values and get real bargains? Why don't you see what you're getting before you pay for it?
